Figure 9

placing a finger pad shield in contact with a bowler's finger pad forming a contact area between the bowler's finger pad and the finger pad shield placing the bowler's finger and the finger pad shield in the finger hole of a bowling ball placing the finger pad shield in contact with the interior surface of the finger hole releasing the bowler's finger pad from the bowling ball hole by applying a force from the bowler's finger pad against surface of the finger pad shield and against the interior surface of the finger hole receiving the force of bowling ball against the finger pad shield and distributing the force of the bowling ball over the contact area.